dashlane

News about another critical flaw in OpenSSL technology has been making its way around the web. It's important that you're aware of the CCS Injection vulnerability. If exploited, it could allow an attacker to retrieve your personal information, including emails, passwords and payment info, by intercepting communications between you and the websites you use.

While Dashlane uses OpenSSL technology, we confirm that your Dashlane data is safe:

- Your Dashlane data is not impacted by this flaw
- Your Master Password is safe, as it is never transmitted
- Your personal data, when transmitted, is always encrypted locally with your Master Password using AES-256, which is not affected by this bug

While your Dashlane accounts are safe, other websites that you use may be at risk.

We built the Dashlane Threat Center to make it easy for you to learn more about the vulnerability and how to protect yourself.

- Use our Website Checker to see which websites are still at risk
- View our infographic that clearly explains the vulnerability
- Get tips on how to stay safe from the bug as you browse
